QUIGLEY'S VILLAGE	#7	28:00	22:00	REC	PA/O	01-04-97	8:00A
	The importance of responsibility and how we have to be capable of being trusted with small things before we can be trusted with larger ones is what the children are taught today.
	#8	28:00	22:00	REC	PA/O	01-11-97	8:00A
	Think before you speak is the lesson today. Kind or unkind words make a difference in how people feel.
	#9	28:00	22:00	REC	PA/O	01-18-97	8:00A
	Today they learn about being content with what they have and to be creative, using their imagination.
	#10	28:00	22:00	REC	PA/O	01-25-97	8:00A
	The children learn not to be afraid and how to have courage to do what is right.
	#12	28:00	22:00	REC	PA/O	02-01-97	8:00A
	Today the children learn about patience and being what they are instead of pretending to be someone else.
	#13	28:30	22:00	REC	PA/O	02-08-97	8:00A
	Learning to listen is what is being taught today. Sometimes we want to "out-talk" everyone and we miss out on something important.
	#1	28:30	22:00	REC	PA/O	02-15-97	8:00A
	The children are taught manners today and how to respond when being introduced to someone. They also learn about asking permission before taking something that does not belong to them.

	The children are taught that cooperation and working together produces much faster results. They also learn about safety, especially when handling sharp tools.
	#3	28:30	22:00	REC	PA/O	03-01-97	8:00A
	Children are taught that getting angry does not solve any problems, but cooling down and compromising is the solution.
	#4	28:30	22:00	REC	PA/O	03-08-97	8:00A
	Temptation is the lesson for today with the children being taught that temptation may make something look good but when you know it is wrong, don't do it.
	#5	28:00	22:00	REC	PA/O	03-15-97	8:00A
	The lesson today is on forgiveness. It is very important to forgive someone when they say they are sorry, but it is also important to forgive someone when they don't.

	A crooked businessman and a bank robber team up to sell bullet proof vests to the folks in town. They use pressure tactics to convince the people of their need for a bullet proof vest. Mr. Tutwater, Miss Lana, and Elmer buy a vest. The businessman and the robber cook up a scheme to get rid of the sheriff. Nicodemus warns Gospel Bill and the outlaws are arrested. Gospel Bill reminds the children they can go to God and ask Him for His protection.

	Neighbor Ned holds a gun on outlaw, Slim Watson. Nicodemus runs to the Sheriff's office to get Gospel Bill. Gospel Bill takes Slim Watson to jail. Wells Fargo offers a reward of $5,000 for the capture of Slim. Nicodemus thinks that Gospel Bill should get part of the reward money but Gospel Bill says Ned had things all wrapped up by the time he got there. The Wells Fargo agent tries to convince Gospel Bill to keep some of the money for himself. Gospel Bill talks with the children about always telling the truth. He says it never pays to tell a lie.

	The lesson for today's program is persevere - don't quit. Be an overcomer, even when things get tough. Gospel Bill has a prisoner escape from jail twice and Nicodemus wants to quit his class because he's having a hard time with his homework. The burglar is caught and put back in jail and Gospel Bill encourages Nicodemus not to quit because everyone faces tough times. He will get stronger if he finishes what he started.

Carman discusses the topic of depression with his guests, Dale Doty, Director of Christian Family Institute, Hilda Sanders, Program Director, Shadow Mr. Hospital and Deborah Newman, Psychotherapist, Minirth Meier New Life Clinics. Twenty million Americans suffer from the devastating affects of depression. It is the most common emotional disorder people experience, and the number one cause of suicide in America, leading to 24,000 deaths each year. The most important advice for the depressed person is to seek help. But, because of the nature of the problem, most depressed people will not seek help. Often depressed people think if they discuss their problem, it will only worsen. The depressed person often gives up and gives into depression and is unable to help himself/herself or even seek aid. Intervention by a caring person to help the depressed person get help is essential.

Carman discusses nutrition with Joel Robbins, Health & Wellness, Tulsa, OK, Lillie Hethringeon, Nutritional Consultant, Plano, TX, and Pamela Smith, author of Eat Well Live Well. Despite having the world's best and most advanced health care system, America rates a mere 17th place on a global health scale. Hectic lifestyles combined with the tendency to eat highly processed foods that are high in fat, sodium and/or calories and low in nutrition, compromise American's health. People are left with a nutritional deficit that depletes their energy, and thus, their ability to keep up. In an attempt to boost their energy, people are increasingly reaching for stimulants like sugar, salt, caffeine or nicotine. These stimulate the adrenalin or thyroid gland, giving people an artificial sense of energy. Overall health drops and the body becomes susceptible to sickness and disease as the immune system becomes weakened. Real energy comes from foods that fuel the body with energy that is sustained over periods of time. These foods include: whole grains, nuts, seeds, fresh vegetables and frest fruit.

Muscles stabilize and hold bones together. Those muscles need to be exercised to build and maintain their strength. A certain group of people may not see results because they eat small breakfasts, medium lunches and large dinners. Food is fuel. There is not enough time to utilize the food before going to bed and the food, regardless of quality, will be stored as fat. Mike stated that you cannot spot reduce fat tissue. If you focus on exercises that are for specific areas you will tone and firm the muscles but it takes calorie reduction and cardiovascular workouts to reduce fatty tissue; exercises like running, walking swimming, and stairsteps.

Carman discusses Anger today with Clinical Psychologist and author, Dr. Neil Clark Warren. Carman asks Dr. Warren what typically makes people angry? Dr. Warren states that people get angry because they get hurt or frustrated or threatened in some way. They're afraid. Anger is really energy, physical energy, so something can be done about the situation that causes the pain. Carman asks, "Is such a thing as good anger?" Dr. Warren says he thinks all anger is good if you learn how to handle anger effectively. If you use anger in the interest of dealing with the situations that cause the primary pain, then anger is good. If, on the other hand, anger is used to get even, to make someone hurt like they've made you hurt or to get vengeance, that's bad anger. People can learn to control their anger by setting limits for themselves and thinking about the choices they have in a given situation.

	Carman discussed self esteem with Clinical Psychologist Mignnone Sawyer. Self esteem is defined as how a person perceives his or herself as well as how he or she believes the world sees the individual. Despite this dichotomy, Mignnone contends that self esteem must be inwardly driven as opposed to based on what others think of a person. People must be true to themselves and if this is built on good values that enhance life, then it will stand the test of others opinions - good or bad.

	Carman addresses the need for relaxation in our lives. Carman's guest is David Leifeste, counselor and expert in biofeedback. Mr. Leifeste defines Relaxation as getting your body and mind centered and quiet so that you are decreasing the adverse affect of stress on your system. Carman asked David what would stop someone from being able to relax. David said if you have a lot on your mind, if you have a situation that creates a lot of uncertainty, your mind goes to a lot of "what ifs" and you tend to be fearful and frightened and anxious. Then it's hard to get your mind to be still and your body to relax. In fact, 80% of the stress-related disorders that are dealt with at doctor's offices are a part of not being able to relax. Therapists recommend many naps," mental get aways" and meditation to restore and rejuvenate the body and mind.

	Co-host, Josh McDowell and Steve Arterburn, discuss parenting with Judy Ross, Linda Butcher and Barbara Bessie. The three women are parents of children ranging in age from 10 to 29 years old. Josh first establishes that rules without relationship leads to rebellion . The group goes on to sum up the primary goal for parenting which is to prepare their children for independence. The training of a child is a process that evolves as the child grows in maturity. More responsibility and freedom is given as the child becomes more adept at making decisions and demonstrating responsibility. Children must be ready for life when they leave high school because the pressures outside of high school are immense. Accordingly, children need training and experience for life's wide range of challenges that they will face. As young adults they need to be able to deal with economical, political, social and spiritual issues.

Co-hosts Josh McDowell and Steve Arterburn discuss choices and consequences in the age of AIDS with four teenagers, Brandy, Melissa, Jason and Zach. The young people agree that teenagers who become sexually involved are influenced by the idea "everybody is doing it," and that they themselves are invulnerable to disease. Mistakenly, young people think they are too young to die, and that AIDS is a "gay" disease. Josh explains that abstinence is the only way to totally protect a person from contracting AIDS. Josh goes on to talk about how waiting for sex until marriage is an incredible investment in the future, rather than a kill-joy or merely an old fashion and outdated rule.

Josh McDowell and co-host Steve Arterburn talk about Tolerance , and the osmosis of its meaning that has changed the way the generation of the 90's sees the world from past generations. Tolerance use to mean the acceptance of others' right to hold an opinion even if it differed from one's own belief. In this age of "politically correctness", tolerance has come to mean the acceptance of the idea that no one's belief is more correct than anybody elses. To believe that one's opinion or belief is right and another wrong, is consideed intolerant and bigoted; and therefore is a form of mental imperialism and subsequently, intellectual suicide. This shift in a societies' paradigm is being taught in universities today. The underlying structure of thought put forth in higher education is tolerance rather than truth, and a "style" of thinking over the substance or fact of what is thought.

In part 2 of Tolerance, Josh McDowell and Steve Arterburn talk about Cultural Relativism, the idea that every culture has a right to determine what is right or wrong. During the Nuremberg Trials following WWII, this was the Nazi militants' defense against the war crime charges. Cultural relativism is founded on the supposition that there are no absolutes by which to base a judgment of right or wrong. This idea of relativism is unmoored from the notion of consequences and divorced from the concept of the existence of truth. And, it follows, according to this belief system, that relativism is not only applicable and necessary for cultures to exist, but is a mandate for individuals within a culture. This places the fundamental measure of "truth" or "right and wrong" on what ever a person believes, feels or desires. As relativism in the 90's continues to evolve in America, in its fullest realization, it is moving us toward a culture void of absolutes (such as it is wrong to kill). Like Nazi Germany, advanced civilizations through out history have eventually imploded following this pathway of relativism in the name of tolerance.

Josh McDowell and Steve Arterburn talk about how kids who reach puberty typically struggle with poor self image. Often it is because they base their self image on external appearance and compare themselves to others, whether that pertains to clothes, looks, personality, talents or financial status. Usually, either kids believe they fall short of some ideal image, or they become very prideful and believe they are above others. Josh and Steve explore the way God in the Bible sees individuals. In the Bible there is the dichotomy between humankind who is sinful, yet so loved by God that He gave His only son to die for the human race. This concept reflects how incredibly invaluable people are despite their imperfections. Josh and Steve encourage young people to accept the love of God and pattern it for others - to encourage people to understand how valuable and loved they are.

Josh said he believes an entire generation has lost the ability to discern right from wrong. Josh asks the kids on the program, "What is the biggest temptation for kids today to make a wrong decision? What area is it that would tempt most people your age the most?" The kids said sexual immorality and the pressure that comes from their peers.
